Unit consolidation – Betashares US Equities Strong Bear Currency Hedged Complex ETF (ASX Code: BBUS)

Betashares Capital Limited (Betashares), the Responsible Entity of Betashares US Equities Strong Bear Currency Hedged Complex ETF ('BBUS') today announces the upcoming consolidation of the units on issue in the fund.

The consolidation will take effect from 2 December 2025. Once completed it is expected to result in a more favourable bid-offer spread for investors in percentage terms.

This announcement contains details of the consolidation, its impact on units, tax considerations and timeline.

Please do not hesitate to contact MUFG Corporate Markets Investor Centre or Betashares if you have any questions.

BBUS Unit Consolidation Summary

Overview:

- BBUS units will be consolidated on a 1 for 10 basis.
- the final day for trading BBUS units before the consolidation is 1 December 2025.
- the consolidation process will commence on 2 December 2025.

Impact on units:

- if the consolidation would otherwise result in an investor holding a fraction of a unit, this will be rounded up to the nearest whole number.
- apart from the effect of rounding up fractional units, the consolidation will not affect an investor's percentage holdings in BBUS or the aggregate value of their holdings.

During the consolidation period:

- during the period 2 December 2025 to 10 December 2025 (inclusive), the units in BBUS will trade on a deferred settlement basis under ASX Code: BBUDB (not BBUS).
- any trading of units during the deferred settlement period will settle on 15 December 2025, rather than on a normal T+2 settlement basis.
- importantly, the deferred settlement period will result in a delay in receiving the proceeds if an investor sells units during this period.
 - for example, if an investor sells their units on 2 December 2025, they will receive the sale proceeds on 15 December, rather than on 4 December (T+2 excluding weekends).
 - as such, any investor who is considering selling their units during the deferred settlement period, and who may be concerned about the deferred settlement, is encouraged to factor this into their decision making.

Impact of consolidation on unitholding

BBUS units on issue will be consolidated on a 1 for 10 basis. This means if an investor held 100 units prior to the consolidation, they will hold 10 units post consolidation.

Reason for the Consolidation

The consolidation of units on a 1 for 10 basis will cause an increase in the BBUS' unit price to reflect the reduced number of units on issue, which is expected to result in a more favourable bid-offer spread for investors in percentage terms.

To illustrate the impact of the unit consolidation on the bid-offer spread, we provide the following example: At a unit price of ~$3.03, and assuming a 1 cent bid-offer spread, the percentage spread is ~0.33%. At a post-consolidation unit price of ~$30.30 and assuming a bid-offer spread of 1 cent, the percentage spread would be ~0.033%¹.

Rounding of fractional units and other considerations

In any instances where an investor's consolidated unit holding would otherwise result in an entitlement to a fraction of a unit, this will be rounded up to the nearest whole number of units in accordance with the fund's constitution.

For example, if an investor held 109 units prior to the consolidation, they would hold 11 units post consolidation (i.e. rounded up from 10.9).

Apart from adjustments due to rounding up of fractional units (which will also increase the post-consolidation total number of units on issue to an immaterial extent):

- the consolidation will not affect an investor's percentage holding in BBUS.
- the aggregate net asset value of each investor's holding in BBUS will not change.
- the current rights attaching to units (as set out in the BBUS constitution) will not be affected by the consolidation.

In the absence of other factors, the ASX quoted price per unit can be expected to increase to reflect the reduced number of units on issue.

¹ Illustration only. The actual post-consolidation unit price may differ from the example depending on market movements leading up to the consolidation. For reference, the minimum price step prescribed by the ASX for a security price above $2.00 is 1 cent (we have used 1 cent in the example). Actual post-consolidation bid-offer spreads will vary and may be higher or lower than that shown in the example.

Tax implications

Set out below is a summary of the general Australian tax implications of the consolidation for investors who hold their units on capital account. The summary in this section is general in nature only. It does not constitute tax advice and should not be relied upon as such.

The consolidation of units will only reduce the number of units on issue, and there should be no change to the beneficial ownership. Accordingly, it should not give rise to a capital gains tax event and there should be no effect on the total cost base of an investor's units. However, the consolidation will affect the cost base of each of an investor's units. The cost base of each consolidated unit should be equal to the aggregate of the cost bases of the units that were consolidated into that new unit.

The consolidation of units should not affect the date of acquisition of any units for tax purposes. Where an investor's pre-consolidated units were acquired on different dates, the investor should treat a corresponding proportion of the consolidated units as having been acquired on each acquisition date. In the event that an investor has fractional interests which are rounded up on consolidation, the portion that is rounded up should be taken to have been acquired on the acquisition date of their corresponding original units.

The above summary is based on applicable tax laws and Australian Taxation Office's published guidance and rulings as at the date of this announcement. This summary does not address the consequences that arise for investors who hold their units on revenue account or as trading stock or who are non-residents of Australia for income tax purposes. Investors should seek and rely only on their own professional advice regarding the tax consequences for them arising from the consolidation of units.

Next steps for investors

All investors in BBUS will be provided with a holding statement confirming the number of consolidated units they hold after the consolidation.

No action is required from investors to effect the consolidation or their change in unitholding.

Timetable

The consolidation is expected to occur in accordance with the following timetable:
